This is the first version of macOS to support 64-bit applications When can we expect to have a compatible version Thank you in advance Eric.. I logged out myself off the Apple ID, and now this is the only way I found to stop this madness - at least I can use my laptop for a work again.. Not sure if it covers everything you have tried, but see if the following article can help: What is accountsd and what does it have to do with the Mail app on macOS Catalina - AppleToolBox.. I have tried to disable iCloud Mail integration and other suggestions related to accountsd that fixed this issue in previous Catalina versions but nothing worked.. In the error I got, it told me to go into the Quickbooks menu check for quickbooks updates, which I did.

These updates will be posted soon into the support articles I'm attaching below.. Then I got the following error message: QuickBooks can't be updated when its running from a read-only volume like a disk image or an optical drive.. You'll see 2 separate sets of steps, one is an in-product update, while the other one is done manually.. But If I login again, it is stuck at the login in page, and accountsd comes up again eating up my memory and cpu.. Has anyone tried it and been successful If anyone could, can they post the QB Update information I was looking for some info and cant find any after updating earlier.
